Olympics over, Roh turns toward reunification

SEOUL, South Korea — President Roh Tae-woo, saying the successful Seoul Olympics showed the nation "we can do anything to which we put our mind," repeated today his willingness to meet North Korean President Kim Il-sung to discuss reunification of the peninsula.

Mr. Roh said he would soon present a new national unification formula, pledged to further expand ties with socialist countries, particularly the Soviet Union and China, and promised to "take the lead in realizing a clean and honest government."

In a speech prepared for delivery to the National Assembly this afternoon when he presents the 1989 budget bill, Mr. Roh noted that some Koreans are worried that inflation or recession might follow the Seoul Olympics. "I believe that on the whole we can have confidence in our economy," he said.

"I will assign top policy priority to price stabilization, since it is my unwavering conviction that unless inflation is firmly held in check, our efforts to boost exports, maintain growth and improve income distri-

Saying he hoped to bring about a "spring of reconciliation" between South and North Korea, Mr. Roh recalled his July 7 declaration seeking an end to South-North confrontation and proposing to meet the North's President Kim to discuss "any and all issues."

Noting that a Sept. 8 response by Mr. Kim seemed to agree to a summit, with some preconditions, Mr. Roh said: "I made it clear that I am willing to visit Pyongyang to meet with him." He added that a North-South summit should be held "without any restriction, (but with) frank discussions on all pending issues raised by both sides, including a joint declaration of non-aggression and the unification of our homeland."

An indication of North Korean intentions toward a summit and reconciliation is expected at a meeting of national legislators from both sides Oct. 13 at the armistice village of Panmunjom. Four previous meetings in August floundered mainly on questions of form for a larger conference, rather than on substance.

On the new national unification formula he will present to the nation soon, Mr. Roh said it will "crystallize the views and opinions of citizens from all walks of life."

He said a national unification formula should be practicable and acceptable to both sides, rather than wrapped in Cold War rhetoric or biased in favor of one party.

South Korea and socialist countries have been opened much wider, Mr. Roh said the participation in the Seoul Olympics of the Soviet Union, China and major socialist nations in Eastern Europe would go a long way toward dismantling East-West barriers.

tion politicians are expected to hold the president to his promise to submit to some kind of confidence vote.

Yesterday, meanwhile, the government released more than 1,000 prisoners, including 52 political offenders, under an amnesty marking National Foundation Day, a major national holiday. The Associated Press reported.

Opposition parties, which have demanded the release of "all political prisoners," called it inadequate. Kim Dae-jung, president of the Party for Peace and Democracy, said "only one-tenth of the prisoners of conscience" were freed but gave no overall figures.

Among those amnestied were Lee Tae-bok, a 38-year-old publisher whose release was demanded by delegates to the World Congress of PEN in Seoul last month. PEN, a London-based organization of literary figures, said Mr. Lee was arrested in 1961 on charges of plotting to organize a leftist underground and fomenting a communist rebellion through a publishing company he owned.

Three other imprisoned writers whose release was sought by PEN were excluded from yesterday's amnesty.
